iTRAIN, INC., A LEADER IN E-LEARNING, CHANGES NAME TO TRAINUTOPIA AND MAKES GEORGETOWN HOME

April 27, 2001—Georgetown, TX—On March 23rd, iTrain, Inc.—now TrainUtopia—moved its headquarters from Austin to larger offices in Georgetown. TrainUtopia will be having its Ribbon Cutting Ceremony on April 27 to celebrate the official opening of its new headquarters. The announced name change is a reflection of the company's commitment to continuous improvement of learning principles and training design.

When asked why the decision was made to relocate to Georgetown, "The rents were getting too high in Austin," says Shannon Lear Martin, founder and CEO of TrainUtopia, "and Georgetown gives our employees a much higher quality of life at work. This is critical to our continued need to attract new employees." As a former manager of customer service at Power Computing Corporation, Martin is committed to building a strong local presence. Additionally Martin said, "I could not be happier about our decision to move. We're all elated about doing business in a nurturing community like Georgetown."

TrainUtopia specializes in creating customized web and computer-based training solutions; with the goal of making learning effective and enjoyable for people with all types of learning styles. Computer-based training also saves time and money when compared to traditional training methods. According to the 10/30/00 edition of Red Herring Magazine, "Corporations can save 50 to 70 percent on employee education by using technology-based methods as well as cut training time in half."
